WINNERS

Charles D. McFaul

For 33 years the Fund for the City of New York's Public Service Awards Program has honored outstanding civil servants whose work performance and commitment to the public transcend not merely the ordinary but the extraordinary—day after day and year after year. In honoring these winners, we also acknowledge the contributions of the many thousands of dedicated public servants who, with integrity and devotion, perform the work that keeps this complex city running.

This year's winners, and the 215 winners from previous years, were selected from among more than 250,000 eligible workers in the mayoral agencies, the Transit and Housing Authorities, the Health and Hospitals Corporation, The City University of New York, district attorneys' offices and the public libraries.

Winners come from all levels and ranks of New York City's government.

Sloan Public Service Award Winners demonstrate some or all of the following: extraordinary service delivered with ingenuity, energy and compassion—an expression of commitment far beyond the call of duty; responsiveness to public needs by cutting through red tape or developing more effective methods of service delivery; outstanding and reliable performance both under the pressures of daily routine and in times of crisis; willingness to take risks, if that is what is needed, to improve services or correct abuses or inequities; the ability to adapt to change and provide a continued high standard of service to the public; and upholding the public interest amidst competing interests, pressures and demands.

The Fund for the City of New York is grateful to the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation for its support of this program for the past 21 years.

2006 SLOAN PUBLIC SERVICE AWARD WINNERS

“She is a magnet to history, she lures you on rather than pushing you away.”

LEONORA GIDLUND

Director, Municipal Archives, Department of Records and Information Services

In 1985, historian Leonora Gidlund began a job as an archivist in the Municipal Archives. She now directs the Archives, having won a reputation as a national leader in the field, helping transform the Archives into a well-known, accessible symbol of public service excellence. The Archives acquires, preserves and makes available historically valuable, irreplaceable original records of New York City government, dating back to 1647. The approximately 160,000 cubic feet of records include legislative documents from the first Dutch government in New Amsterdam, criminal justice records from 1684, maps, over a million photographs, birth and death records, mayoral records, sound recordings, moving images and more. Users range from people researching family histories to scholars to film makers. Over 60,000 requests a year come in for vital records alone.

Ms. Gidlund and her staff appraise and acquire materials, catalogue and preserve them, produce microfilm images and photography—all requiring great skill, care, knowledge and judgment. Her accomplishments include inspecting first and then retrieving from a basement and restoring 1,100 cartons of Robert Moses' moldy papers; traveling by boat to Potter's Field where "unclaimed" persons are buried, to inspect and ultimately take possession of records of interments then housed in a deteriorating trailer; mounting exhibits and assembling and preserving the heart-wrenching tributes and posters created for September 11th victims. She balances the need to protect the treasures of history with the public's need to learn from them, spending much of her time with visitors, throwing herself into their hunt for a document with enthusiasm, sensitivity, encouragement, and hours of her own work, demonstrating in this and all she does, innovativeness, attentiveness to the public and energy rarely seen in the field of government archive work.

“His feats of achieving the seemingly impossible at moments of intense stress and duress, his brilliant contingency planning and preparedness work, his innovations in mapping have earned him the nickname ‘Action Jackson’ within his agency.”

HENRY JACKSON

Deputy Commissioner for Technology, Office of Emergency Management (OEM)

Henry Jackson began his career in City service in 1986, working for 11 years in the Office of the Mayor, introducing office automation, managing fiscal operations and facilities, personnel and budget functions and monitoring contracts. After a two-year detour at a private technology company, he returned to public service, this time to OEM, as Deputy Director for Administration and, since 2002, as Deputy Commissioner for Technology. OEM is the agency charged with coordinating the City's response across the full spectrum of involved agencies whenever a disaster or other emergency strikes New York.

Occupying one of the hottest seats in city government, Mr. Jackson is lauded for his indefatigable energy, willingness to take on assignments and exceptional ability to motivate and work with people from disparate backgrounds in a crisis with unflappable reliability. On September 11th, the emergency operations center he helped design was destroyed. Within 32 hours, he assembled a team of 150 agency and utilities' representatives and technology experts to create a new one with 300 computer seats, central command platform, data and software, radio communications, fax lines, food, sleeping space and more. Working around the clock, he then established a Family Assistance Center. After Hurricane Katrina, he directed the assembling of provisions and organizing of 800 city emergency workers who went to New Orleans to aid in the rescue. Within a week of the storm he created and opened three welcome centers with emergency housing, social services, counseling, and other aid to the 2,000 evacuees from New Orleans who fled to New York City. OEM's extraordinary mobile geographic information capacity, among other proactive initiatives come from Mr. Jackson's foresight. He has opened and run three interim and backup emergency operations centers while planning for the new one.

“A true unsung hero. An acknowledged national expert on public health law, he can work on any initiative, catch on to its importance, and do whatever is needed to protect the City and the public, but always within the law. He is the image of what a public servant should be.”

WILFREDO LOPEZ

General Counsel for Health, Department of Health and Mental Hygiene

Wilfredo Lopez joined the Department of Health as Assistant General Counsel 27 years ago. He has been General Counsel since 1992, helping seven health commissioners and their medical staffs navigate some of the most worrisome and urgent threats New York City faces. As chief legal officer for health, Mr. Lopez has been on the frontlines of the scourge of AIDS, emergence of drug-resistant TB, West Nile Virus, 9/11, and now, the prevalence of diabetes, threats of pandemic flu and bio-terrorism, and anthrax scares. “We are data-driven,” he says, “we need to know what diseases or other health hazards are emerging, where, and who is affected.” He fine-tunes the legal processes by which his department obtains information it needs—conducting surveillance or issuing subpoenas if necessary—but not allowing abuse of the police powers entrusted to them. With his legal guidance, directly observed treatment of TB patients was initiated successfully; a groundbreaking tripartite agreement was reached between his Department, NYPD and the FBI to share information about bio-terrorism; a diabetes registry was developed to monitor medical tests without compromising confidentiality. Legal and medical professionals agree that his extraordinary ability to grasp and work through medical issues relevant to protecting the public’s health and apply the formidable powers granted to his agency, while protecting individual rights and privacy, have led him to find workable solutions to new, daunting and weighty problems.

Nationally recognized and sought out, he advises the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, educates other health agencies, writes about the law, and is preparing the first comprehensive revision of the City’s Health Code in nearly 50 years. An approachable, modest colleague with intense intellect, he is a trusted, esteemed ally in the fight to protect the nation’s health.

“He is the very best that government can offer—he is ‘Mr. Good Government.’ OATH is well-run, ethical and living up to its original promise. Everyone should have a chance to see it in action. It is what government tribunals should be.”

CHARLES D. MCFAUL

Deputy Chief Administrative Law Judge/Counsel, Office of Administrative Trials and Hearings (OATH)

In 1979, the first chief judge of the new Office of Administrative Trials and Hearings asked Charles McFaul to become one of its administrative law judges. OATH was created as an independent, centralized, neutral, highly professional office in which workplace disputes, disciplinary and human rights matters, disagreements between contractors and the city, disputes regarding enforcement of city laws and codes and other allegations of administrative infractions, could be heard. OATH has emerged as “the gold standard” in administrative tribunals, not just in New York but throughout the country. Many attribute its fine reputation to the tireless work of Charles McFaul, who successfully fought to keep it away from political influence and has, by example and through years of devoted service, set the highest standards for its operation.

All agree that Charles McFaul is a fine lawyer and superb judge, able to resolve seemingly intractable cases creatively, before they go to trial, saving time, money and reducing angst for all concerned. His management skills are as outstanding as his judicial abilities. In 99 percent of OATH’s cases, agency heads accept OATH’s findings, testimony to their processes, thoroughness and fairness. His penchant for innovation is extraordinary. He conceived and implemented OATH’s mediation program, which achieves a 90 percent resolution rate on cases that come before them. He is implementing an electronic case management system that will reduce paperwork and allow parties to file pleadings and view hearing schedules via the Internet. He helped create a technological solution in which seven other agencies and OATH, housed in the same building, pool resources to get joint email, security systems and an electronic law library. The Chief Administrative Judge praises him as “The Father of OATH.”

“She is the ubiquitous and welcome face of city government, showing up at all hours of the day and night, in all corners of the five boroughs, to offer relief to small businesses.”

BERNADETTE NATION

Director, Business Outreach Team (BOT), Department of Small Business Services (SBS)

Bernadette Nation has had two careers in city government, spanning 33 year. First, with the Board of Education as a teaching aide, youth worker and counselor, where, among other things, she taught at-risk adolescents building maintenance and restoration skills in Harlem, introducing them to the industrious business owners of 125th Street. Twenty-two years later, she was encouraged to join a new government initiative to help businesses in Harlem and The Bronx. She sacrificed seniority rights earned at the Board of Education to take on the new challenge as a project coordinator of the Business Assistance Unit. In 1998, she became the first director of what is now known as the Business Outreach Team in the Department of Small Business Services—a city-wide effort in which she serves as champion and ombudsman for the city's 240,000 small businesses.

Business owners seek BOT's help when a disaster strikes or to facilitate interactions with other city departments. Ms. Nation and her staff are on call around the clock, at emergency scenes, assessing damage, conferring with other agencies and informing business owners of help for which they may qualify. She supervises the processing of emergency grants, sometimes coordinating assistance across multiple city, state, federal and nonprofit agencies, not closing a case until she has exhausted every possible avenue of relief. When not in the field, she makes presentations to business groups about city services available to them and to City agencies about how to improve their services to small businesses. BOT assists 3,000 businesses a year and has helped 429 through fires, water main breaks, building collapses, explosions, a plane crash and September 11th.

“She opens the whole world, the new and the old, for her students. They learn to play traditional instruments, they compose music on electronic equipment and they are frequent visitors to Lincoln Center.”

MARIE SANZONE

Music Teacher, P.S. 247, Brooklyn, Department of Education

Marie Sanzone has been an elementary school teacher for 37 years, teaching music to at least 6,000 young people so far. In the early years, she taught them to read music and play it on the recorder. During the City's fiscal crisis, funding for music education was cut and Ms. Sanzone was assigned to teach all academic subjects. At the end of every lesson, however, she connected it to some aspect of music—fractions, with whole, half, quarter and eighth notes; history, with music of the period; geography, with songs from different nations. Now, after learning about computers herself, she has her students reading music, playing it and even composing on state-of-the-art equipment she raised money to acquire. Parents and colleagues marvel at her ability to reinvent her teaching style and methods to reach students as their interests and circumstances change. Currently, 30 different languages are spoken at P. S. 247.

Ms. Sanzone engages parents, bringing them into the school to participate with their children, uniting them with the universal languages of music and dance. She developed partnerships with Carnegie Hall and Lincoln Center, arranging for artists to perform in her classroom and for her classes to see performances there. She initiated an “artist-in-residence” role for a pioneer in electronic music to create original music for her students and perform for them. She developed skill in proposal writing and received prestigious grants to sustain her much-heralded music program that is better than what most private schools offer. Visitors from other countries come to see her one-of-a-kind music lab. Tirelessly dedicated to public education, she is now devoting herself to teaching other teachers to replicate her success.

SELECTION PROCESS AND PANEL

SLOAN PUBLIC SERVICE AWARDS SELECTION PROCESS

All employees of mayoral agencies, the Transit and Housing Authorities, the Health and Hospitals Corporation, The City University of New York, district attorneys' offices and the public libraries are eligible for consideration for a Sloan Public Service Award. The emphasis is on individuals who have made a career of public service.

The Fund for the City of New York welcomes nominations. To nominate a person, provide a description of the candidate, including significant career information, the particular achievements that occasion the nomination and the qualities the nominee embodies. Names go into a reserve pool, and each nominee is reviewed in due course. Recommendations, once made, need not be renewed. Nominations should be sent to Barbara J. Cohn Berman, Vice President, Fund for the City of New York.

The names of City employees who emerge with the strongest recommendations are submitted to the Selection Panel, an independent group of citizens picked on the basis of their standing in the community and their knowledge of government. In choosing the winners, panel members are guided by profiles of each nominee, descriptions of the contributions made and their own evaluations.

FUND FOR THE CITY OF NEW YORK

The Fund for the City of New York is a private operating foundation created by the Ford Foundation in 1968 with the mandate to improve the quality of life for all New Yorkers. The Fund achieves this mission by being responsive to the issues of New York City and to opportunities to improve the performance of its government and nonprofit organizations. All of the Fund's accomplishments are the result of creative partnerships with foundations, government agencies, community-based organizations, the private sector, nonprofits and universities in New York. Its four strategic initiatives are the Center on Municipal Government Performance, the Youth Development Institute, the Center for Internet Innovation/E-Community Connect, and the Center for Nonprofit Enterprise Solutions. Its core programs include Cash Flow Loans, the Incubator Program, Design Studio, and Management and Technology Assistance.

ALFRED P. SLOAN FOUNDATION

The Alfred P. Sloan Foundation is a philanthropic nonprofit institution established by Alfred P. Sloan, Jr. in 1934. Its main programs involve science and technology, standard of living and economic performance, education and careers in science and technology, selected national issues and a civic program. The goal of the civic program is to contribute to New York City by responding to special opportunities the city presents and by funding high-leverage programs related to its areas of interest. The Sloan Public Service Awards of the Fund for the City of New York has been part of its civic program since 1985.
